1. Cookies

Cookies are small data files stored on your computer by websites you visit. They do not transfer viruses or malware but function as logs that record user activity and maintain stateful information. For more details about the cookies we use, please refer to the relevant section below.

2. Usage of Cookies

These cookies also help track website performance, ensuring a high-quality customer experience by addressing potential issues promptly. For instance, cookies help us determine the most effective navigation paths and assess the impact of external referrals, thereby improving future advertising campaigns.

Additionally, session cookies are used to maintain login states, saving you from re-entering credentials. Functional cookies enable us to remember your preferences, secure your information, and enhance operational efficiency—for example, by remembering your username and language settings across sessions.
